

The Cave at Owl-Pooh Corner

*A supplement for
Adventures in d100 Acre Wood*

by Thomas Deeny

The Cave at Owl-Pooh Corner

A supplement for

Adventures in d100 Acre Wood

Introduction

“Is that the end of the story?” asked Robin Christopher.

“Only of that one,” I said. “There are others.”

“About Owl-Pooh and Me?”

“And all your other friends. Rustlet, Modrian, Sue Doe Dragon--”

“And Rakky Sha?”

“Him too.”

“What about Batman?” Robin Christopher asked.

“He’s there – Wait. Who?”

“I just got him for my birthday,” she said holding up the small plastic toy.

It was a garish action figure about four inches tall, painted in purple and black with neon green stripes, looking nothing like the Batman I remembered. Something that looked like a small battering ram was spring-loaded in Batman’s right arm where his hand should have been. He was nothing like the soft plush animals she plays with.

I’ll bet my ex-wife sent this to her.

“He’s Outer Space Batman,” she explained. “He shoots far.”

“Outer Space Batman?” I asked. “But he has no space helmet. How does he breathe?”

“He’s Batman. He can breathe in space.”

CHAPTER I

In Which

We Are Introduced to Winnie-the-Owl-Pooh's Friend, the Batman

The inhabitants of d100 Acre Wood – Winnie-the-Owl-Pooh and his friends – are based on the plush toys that Robin Christopher owns. While the Owl-Pooh is her favorite and is quite often the center of the stories from d100 Acre Wood, all the other toys are loved just as much. In Winnie-the-Owl-Pooh: Adventures in d100 Acre Wood, you play one of the Owl-Pooh's friends. This supplement allows you to not only play one of the goofy monsters from a first edition fantasy role-playing game's bestiary, but also allows you to play Batman.

Only one player can play Batman. Or, if you want to, more than one player can play Batman. But they have to be different Batmen.

Each Batman in the game is based on a different Batman action figure Robin Christopher has. You choose which one you want to play. This will define what things your Batman can do that an Owl-Bear can't.

For instance, you decide you want to play Underwater Action Batman, who comes painted green and blue, has a detachable scuba tank on your face, and bat-water squirting action. Your friend wants to play Outer Space Batman, who comes painted black and purple and neon green, with a bat-erring ram in his arm that shoots far and bat-space armor.

Just remember that you're not playing Batman, you're playing a Batman action figure. So you don't get to open up the belt pouches and take out whatever is bat-handy at the moment. Underwater Action Batman can breathe underwater, swim fast, and squirt people with water. Outer Space Batman can breathe in space and shoot far.

Robin Christopher only has Batmen action figures, so you can't be Wonder Woman, Spider-man, or a Transformer. Unless someone gives her one for her next Birfday.

CHAPTER 2

In Which

A Disclaimer is Made In the Hopes that the Author is Not Sued

Batman is copyrighted and trademarked by DC Comics and is used without permission. Same for Wonder Woman, Spider-man, and the Transformers, except for the DC Comics part, except for Wonder Woman.

